

Membership

Membership is open to reliable, convinced revolutionary anarchists who accept the group's aims and principles, agree to abide by its rules, participate in its activities, and make financial contributions as decided by the group.

What is involved in membership?

Members of the MACG are expected to:

- a. advance and argue for the politics of the group;
- b. undertake political work in support of the aims and agreed strategy of the group;
- c. attend and participate in meetings of the group;
- d. carry out the decisions of the group;
- e. pay agreed dues as set out in these rules.

All members of the group are expected to take on some form of internal assignment and some form of external assignment.

This means that all members do something to contribute to the functioning of the group (for example, managing the bank account) and something to contribute to the political interventions the group is making (for example, participating in a wider campaign group).

Where members are employed, they are expected to be members of their union, and wherever possible, actively organising in their workplace.

How do you become a member?

You do not need to be a member to participate in the activities and campaigns of the group. Membership is not a reflection on a person's character. You do not need to be a member of the group to be an anarchist, a revolutionary, or an effective organiser.

There is a process to join the MACG, and it takes some time.

1. Before applying, work out whether you share our politics

All prospective members are expected to read, understand, and agree to both our Aims and Principles, and our Statement of Shared Positions.

2. Attend the Anarchist Political School, or approach us to discuss the process

All new members are expected to complete the Anarchist Political School workshops. If you are interested in joining, we encourage you to attend the Anarchist Political School sessions and start participating.

If you are unable to attend scheduled Anarchist Political School sessions, contact us to discuss other options.

3. Express interest in becoming a prospective member

A prospective member is someone who has expressed interest in joining the MACG, and that we are supporting to become a member.

The group will assign an existing member to be your contact person / mentor. Your contact person will meet with you to discuss politics, answer questions, and support you to participate in the group's activities.

Prospective members are expected to attend and participate in the Anarchist Political School and some other group activities.

4. Provisional membership

Periodically, the group will invite prospective members, who have shown that they are reliable and committed revolutionary anarchists, to join the group as provisional members.

Provisional members have all the rights of full members, except:

- a. Provisional members don't get to vote on membership matters
- b. Provisional members pay reduced dues

Provisional membership lasts for six months. During the provisional membership period, mentors continue to meet with new members to support them to participate in the group and its activities.

After six months, the group will decide whether to invite a provisional member to become a full member.

To discuss membership in the Melbourne Anarchist Communist Group, participate in the Anarchist Political School, or email [email address] to discuss other options.

If you are outside Melbourne, contact us to discuss how we can support you to establish an anarchist communist group where you live.

Grievances

The MACG has a robust grievance procedure. If you have any issues with the personal conduct of any MACG member, you can email [\[macggrievances@proton.me\]](mailto:macggrievances@proton.me) or communicate it to any other member.

Our internal rules require all members to assist any person who approaches them about a grievance involving the relevant conduct of an MACG member. Members are required to accurately present grievances to be addressed within our grievance procedure.
